Art Exhibition: The Later Works of William Utermohlen

About the artist. William Utermohlen, a London-based artist known for his rich body of work in portraiture and still lifes, was diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease in 1995. It was then he embarked on a series of self-portraits that poignantly and powerfully document the course of his disease. Through his art, we can see Mr. Utermohlen's attempt to stay connected to the world around him while he loses the ability to communicate in other ways. His work is a testimony to the creative and human spirit that resides in all people with Alzheimer's disease. This art exhibition will showcase Mr. Utermohlen's later works and is open free to the public.

Exhibition Dates/Times: Sunday, October 22, to Friday, October 27, 2006—9:00 AM to 5:00 PM

Place: The New York Academy of Medicine, Presidents Gallery
