Art Exhibition: The Later Works of William Utermohlen

This art exhibition is open free to the public and is a companion program to the Alzheimer's Association International Conference on Prevention of Dementia* being held at the Marriott Wardman Park Hotel in Washington, DC, June 9-12, 2007. The program is supported by Myriad Pharmaceuticals, Inc.

About the artist

William Utermohlen, a London-based artist known for his rich body of work in portraiture and still lifes, was diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease in 1995. It was then that he embarked on a series of self-portraits that poignantly and powerfully document the course of his disease. Through his art, we can see Mr. Utermohlen's attempt to stay connected to the world around him while he loses the ability to communicate in other ways. His work is a testimony to the creative human spirit that resides in many people with dementia. This exhibition is dedicated to the memory of William Utermohlen, who passed away in March of 2007.
